

October 5, 2005
Moscow

Citibank customers can now make debt repayments free by postal transfer throughout any of Russian Post Service offices

ZAO Citibank, a member of Citigroup, a leading global financial services corporation, is now offering customers the option to make their credit card or loan repayments at any Russian Post office free of any postal remittance fee.

"This new service is a great example of Citigroup's ability to broaden consumer choice through innovation and also how it can use its business relationships with Russian corporations to bring a unique benefit to its personal banking customers" - said Rajive Chadha, Country Business Manager, Global Consumer Group, Citibank Russia.

This service, which became available in October 2005 not only represents time-savings for customers but it also means that no matter where they are - home, work, country house or even in another Russian city or town while on a business trip or vacation - they will always find a place to repay their debt. In addition, the customer does not have to come to the post office personally - any person authorized by the customer can make the repayment.

Currently, Citibank has 24 branches, sales offices in Moscow and St-Petersburg, and over 150 ATMs through which cash can be both withdrawn and deposited. Apart from that, Citibank customers can make payments at Citibank Online, via 24-hour CitiPhone Banking and also through automatic monthly account debits from their account.

Russian Post has about 40,000 offices throughout the country, including 700 in Moscow and St-Petersburg. Customers can find their nearest post offices location online at: www.russianpost.ru and www.citibank.ru.